December 2015
Opinion Poll

Prepared by Ian McShane J.7012

Technical Appendix

Technical Appendix

- The results of this opinion poll are based upon a representative sample of 918 eligible Irish voters aged 18 years +.
- As such, the results can be deemed to be accurate to within plus or minus 3.3 percentage points at the 95% confidence level.
- Fieldwork was conducted on an in-home, face-to-face basis over the period 30th November, - 9th December 2015.
- The sample was stratified across constituencies at 125 locations in the country with individuals selected for interview by way of Demographic Quotas (age, gender, socioeconomic status) in line with Central Statistics Office (CSO) and market research industry population estimates.

Technical Appendix

- The subsequent survey results are weighted to reflect the known demographic profile of Irish adults, utilising the most recently published census population estimates from the Central Statistics Office (CSO).
- Party support levels are subsequently realigned in accordance with a technical adjustment factor, designed to smooth the effects of extreme highs and lows in support levels for individual parties as measured at a single point in time, and taking variable election day turnout levels into account.
- All aspects of the survey, including the Party Support adjustment factor, are implemented in accordance with the technical and ethical guidelines set down by the Association of Irish Market Research Organisations (AIMRO) and the European Society of Opinion & Market Research (ESOMAR).

Party Support Adjustment Factor: Technical Note

- Predicting election results on the basis of poll data is not an exact science. All the evidence shows that support for individual parties can swing dramatically in the period between elections- very often outside the bounds of historic election results.
- What to do in these circumstances? Most polling companies in Britain and Ireland publish their raw survey results as an index of fluctuations in the emotional mood of voters. They also build in an adjustment based on a number of factors. Where we have reports of how people voted in the last general election as well as how they intend to vote in the next one we can use these data to model the likely level of swing from the last election results.
- We then add back in the forecasts of voters who have not voted last time or do not answer that particular question.
- Finally we take into account each individuals stated likelihood of voting in a forthcoming General Election.
- This is the basis of the adjusted voting forecast in Behaviour & Attitudes polls.

Commentary

Background

Fieldwork for today's poll was conducted over the period 30th November – 9th December, 2015.

On the economic front, news of the potential benefits of the 2016 Budget has had plenty of time to sink into the electorate's collective consciousness, and there were a number of other economic good news stories in the media in the immediate lead in to, and indeed during fieldwork for, this survey.

A number of other national and global issues were however also prevalent during the fieldwork period, which might have counteracted any good news stories on the economic front.

For example, there was much talk of the possible effect of the string of Islamic State terrorist attacks in Paris, the US and beyond, on the global economy.

Meanwhile, while consumer confidence continues to improve, the average Irish voter still struggles with day to day household budgets, ever-increasing rent, and the raft of additional 'austerity charges' introduced over the last number of years.

Background

Other issues that might have affected the results of today's poll include, in no particular order, the following:

- The RTÉ Investigates report, broadcast on Monday, 7th December, which exposed potential corruption across the political system with regard to planning/lobbying applications.
- The last minute drama surrounding the publication of the Banking Inquiry report culminating in Pearse Doherty of Sinn Féin and Joe Higgins of the Socialist Party withdrawing their support of it.
- The devastation caused to homes and businesses along the West coast in particular by Hurricane Desmond, despite the storm's arrival having been forecast days in advance.
- The media furore generated by Alan Kelly of the Labour Party being accused by his colleagues of leaking negative internal polling data.

The cumulative effect has been a relatively negative media environment for the Government and its constituent parties as we approach the end of the year.

Despite this backdrop, today's poll contains good news for Fine Gael and a continuing slide in support for the Independents – evidence that the electorate may be beginning to focus on the realities of the looming election.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

In last month's poll report we noted that support for the manner in which the Government is running the country had dropped amongst supporters of both Fine Gael and Labour, indicating that on-going strains between the coalition partners in agreeing on issues such as rent certainty may have begun to take their toll.

This month, satisfaction with the Government has increased seven points to 35% - up amongst all voters including Government and opposition party supporters.

With regard to party leader personal satisfaction ratings, The Sunday Times/Behaviour & Attitudes series has positioned Micheál Martin as leader of Fianna Fáil as the most 'popular' leader of any of the political parties over the last two years, the one exception being Joan Burton as leader of the Labour Party in the immediate aftermath of her election to that position.

Today, we see Martin just about cling on to the top spot at 40% satisfaction, closely followed by Joan Burton on 39%, an increase of five points for the Tánaiste compared with last month.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

Enda Kenny as Taoiseach has struggled over the last few years to capture the imagination of the electorate at large, with his average personal satisfaction rating across the nine polls prior to today's settling in at just 30%.

The Taoiseach's rating has however improved by four points in December's survey, although dissatisfaction with Kenny as Taoiseach continues to peak amongst those aged 35-54 years (58%), C2DE 'working class' voters (61%), and those living in urban areas (62%).

These patterns of response all feed into the narrative that the current administration, led by Enda Kenny and the Fine Gael party, caters more for the needs of Ireland's middle to upper classes, with the political pitch open to a left-leaning coalition in 2016.

At a broader level, common sense dictates that the existing array of party leaders will remain in place until after the election, with each and every one of them vulnerable to leadership heaves depending on its outcome.

From a party political perspective, November's poll witnessed an uplift in Fine Gael support compared to the previous pre-budget poll, with that increase being most pronounced amongst male, older, white collar, rural dwellers.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

Today's poll registers a further, significant, uplift in support for Fine Gael to 31%, with that increase driven by older, female, rural voters.

Meanwhile, Labour Party support continues to hover around its 12 month average of 8% - on 8% again today and a long way off its 2011 election showing of 19%.

Fianna Fáil and Sinn Féin remain locked on almost identical levels of support, albeit with the latter holding the edge amongst urban, 35-54 years voters, and the former peaking in rural areas.

The broader Independent/'Others' bloc peaked in our series at 32% in July of this year, and declined slowly to a still impressive 26% last month. This gradual decline continues today to a point where the 'Others' now account for 24% of all first preference voting intentions.

While a lot may, of course, change between now and general election day, the broad trends in our polling series would suggest that Fine Gael will return around 45 seats – a loss of around 30 seats in total. The Labour Party, meanwhile, is unlikely to exceed 15 seats, representing for them a loss of more than half of their existing TDs.

Based upon these potential coalition partner numbers, Fine Gael and Labour would still be 20 seats short of an overall majority, and would find themselves relying on support from the likes of the Independent Alliance and a scattering of other Independents to form a Government.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

With regard to the opposition, both Fianna Fáil and Sinn Féin seem destined to return with around 30 seats apiece, and even if they could be convinced to coalesce together, they too would need the support of the likes of the People Before Profit/Anti Austerity Alliance to make up the numbers.

As commentators are beginning to point out, we are approximately ten weeks away from the General Election, and still none the wiser as to the likely composition of the next coalition Government.

Currently, the chances of Fine Gael, Labour and 'Others' forming a coalition is very much dependent on the current junior coalition partner increasing its support to more than 10% - a task which appears to be an increasingly challenging one as each month goes by.

End of Term Ministerial Report Card

As the current administration draws to a close, respondents in December's poll were asked to rate each of the existing Government Ministers in terms of how satisfactory or unsatisfactory they felt their performance has been since they were appointed to their ministries.

Ministers were rated on a ten point scale where 10 meant the respondent felt their performance has been extremely satisfactory, and 1 meant it had been extremely unsatisfactory.

While none of the ministers was allocated a particularly flattering average rating out of ten, Michael Noonan, Simon Coveney, Frances Fitzgerald and Leo Varadkar are top of the class – with between a fifth and a quarter of the electorate giving them a rating of between 7 and 10 out of ten.

The lowest average satisfaction ratings were registered for James Reilly, Joan Burton and Alan Kelly, with 87% of all voters rating Minister Reilly at less than seven out of ten.
