Technical Appendix

Sample Size

The results of this opinion poll are based upon a representative sample of 923 eligible Irish voters aged 18 years+.

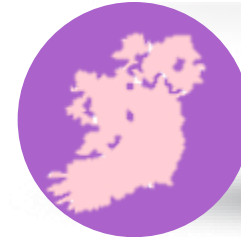

Fieldwork

As such, the results can be deemed to be accurate to within plus or minus 3.3 percentage points at the 95% confidence level. Fieldwork was conducted on an in-home, face-to-face basis over the period Thursday, 2nd January – Tuesday, 14th January, 2020.

Location

The sample was stratified across all constituencies at 125 locations in the country with individuals selected for interview by way of Demographic Quotas (age, gender, socio-economic status) in line with Central Statistics Office (CSO) and market research industry population estimates.

Weighting

The subsequent survey results are weighted to reflect the known demographic profile of Irish adults, utilising the most recently published census population estimates from the Central Statistics Office (CSO).

Party Support

Party support levels are subsequently realigned in accordance with a technical adjustment factor, designed to smooth the effects of extreme highs and lows in support levels for individual parties as measured at a single point in time, and taking variable election day turnout levels into account.

Guidelines

All aspects of the survey, including the Party Support adjustment factor, are implemented in accordance with the technical and ethical guidelines set down by the Association of Irish Market Research Organisations (AIMRO) and the European Society of Opinion & Market Research (ESOMAR).

Party Support Adjustment Factor: Technical Note

- Predicting election results on the basis of poll data is not an exact science. All the evidence shows that support for individual parties can swing dramatically in the period between elections- very often outside the bounds of historic election results.
- What to do in these circumstances? Most polling companies in Britain and Ireland publish their raw survey results as an index of fluctuations in the emotional mood of voters. They also build in an adjustment based on a number of factors. Where we have reports of how people voted in the last general election as well as how they intend to vote in the next one we can use these data to model the likely level of swing from the last election results.
- We then add back in the forecasts of voters who have not voted last time or do not answer that particular question.
- Finally we take into account each individuals stated likelihood of voting in a forthcoming General Election.
- This is the basis of the adjusted voting forecast in Behaviour & Attitudes polls.

Adjusted figures based on:

- All who state they would definitely vote
- Weighting of those respondents who give a definite answer as to who they would vote for in a general election and who they voted for in the last election, a quarter of the way between stated voting intention and the result of the last election.
- Making no adjustment to stated voting intention of those who do not indicate how they voted in last election.

Commentary

Background

Fieldwork for today's poll was conducted over the period Thursday, 2nd to Tuesday, 14th January. In other words, interviewing for the survey was just ending as Taoiseach, Leo Varadkar travelled to Áras an Uachtaráin to request a dissolution of the Dáil, in advance of a General Election on Saturday, 8th February.

As such, today's poll cannot be described as the first of the election campaign. Rather, it is the last opinion poll taken before the campaign proper began and, therefore, it can be argued that it is still all to play for over the next three weeks of campaigning.

Now that the election has been called, attention switches of course to the issues upon which the final result will likely hinge, and how well or poorly placed the different parties are to provide credible solutions to them.

One school of thought would have it that in emphasising the remarkable financial recovery of the last ten years, along with its extraordinary achievements in protecting Ireland's interests in Brexit negotiations, Fine Gael will grow in stature as the campaign progresses, and emerge victorious as the largest party in the Dáil.

Others feel that Fianna Fáil is entering the election with the wind in its sails, and can defeat Fine Gael by way of highlighting Government failures in relation to housing and health, at the same time exploiting the very real differences between the financial health of those living in urban and rural areas.

Meanwhile Sinn Féin will presumably need to convince the electorate that both Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael's insistence that they will not enter coalition with the party cannot be taken at face value, and that a vote for Sinn Féin is not in fact a wasted one.

Background

Finally, both the Green Party and the Labour Party will be aiming to capitalise on their reasonably solid performance in the Local and European Elections, while the smaller parties will be fighting to ensure their voice is heard above the fray of all others.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

Government satisfaction is at its lowest level in today's poll since February/March, 2017, with just three in ten of all voters happy with the manner in which the Government is running the country, and six in ten unhappy. Highest levels of Government dissatisfaction are expressed by females (65%), those aged 35-54 years (65%), and residents of the broad Dublin and Leinster region (66%).

It would seem that the public agrees with many of the politicians themselves who had claimed prior to the election being called that this Government had run out of steam, shuddering to a natural halt as we entered the new decade. Along with declining Government satisfaction, our poll also registers a fourth consecutive drop in Leo Varadkar's personal satisfaction rating as Taoiseach. In fact, at a popularity rating of just 35%, this is the lowest personal score registered for Varadkar since he took office, and positions him as the least popular of the four party leaders measured in the poll. Over half (53%) of all voters are actually dissatisfied with the way Mr. Varadkar is doing his job as Taoiseach, a figure which peaks at 59% of family-stage 35-54 year olds, and 58% of all blue collar working C2DE individuals.

At a 46% satisfaction level, Micheál Martin is by far the most popular party leader in the country, and this is particularly so amongst older, rural voters. Satisfaction with Brendan Howlin as leader of the Labour Party has remained consistent over the last five months at around 38%. As is the case for Micheál Martin, Howlin's popularity is highest amongst older, rural individuals, and he is significantly more popular amongst white collar professional workers (at 42% satisfaction) than he is amongst blue collar workers (at just 34% satisfaction).

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

Mary Lou McDonald's popularity has slowly recovered from her all-time low of 32% just after the European and Local Elections, to 40% today. McDonald's strengths in the popularity stakes are amongst blue collar, working individuals in Munster, Connaught and Ulster.

Since April of last year, Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael have been neck and neck in the B&A/Sunday Times poll series. By way of illustration, Fianna Fáil's average level of support across the eight month period April to December 2019 was 28%, with the corresponding figure for Fine Gael averaging out at 27%. In fact, throughout 2019 in general, the only remarkable feature of the opinion polls has been how steady and predictable they have been.

Since people resumed their daily routines after the Christmas break, however, it is fair to say that there has been non-stop speculation in the media as to precisely when the next General Election will be called, and the Dáil dissolved. For the first time in four years, therefore, the prospect of a General Election has become considerably more tangible to the public, who have clearly begun to focus in on precisely what type of Government they wish to see returned in 2020.

As people's thoughts began to turn towards the reality of a looming election, January's party support levels represent the most significant monthly shift in public opinion in the history of this survey series.

Thus, the state of play on the eve of the 2020 election being called by An Taoiseach, was that Fianna Fáil enjoyed a 12 percentage point advantage over Fine Gael, with Sinn Féin breathing down Fine Gael's neck in terms of overall support.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

In interpreting these findings, we should of course keep in mind that the General Election campaign only began literally the day after this poll was conducted, and support levels for all of the parties are likely to fluctuate over the next three weeks as they make their respective cases to the electorate. It is also possible that Fine Gael has taken a short-term hit from the disastrously managed RIC commemoration debacle.

Nevertheless, today's poll will add a spring to the step of Fianna Fáil campaigners as they hit the doors, and motivate Fine Gael workers to pull out all of the stops to close the gap with Fianna Fáil.

In connecting with the electorate, Fine Gael should note that while the economy is performing well at a macro level, barely half of the population (49%) believe that their financial circumstances have improved over the last ten years, with between a fifth and a quarter reporting that they are now financially worse off than they were a decade ago. Allied with the public's grave concerns over housing and health in particular, Fianna Fáil's clearest route to maintaining pole position is in hammering home the failings of the Government in these areas over recent years, and explaining in clear terms how they intend to tackle them.

Deeper analysis of the survey data confirms that Fianna Fáil's increase, and Fine Gael's corresponding decrease, in support is most pronounced amongst females, voters aged 35 years+ and across all social classes. At a regional level, Fianna Fáil has surged to extraordinary highs across Munster.

Support for the Labour Party stands at 4% as of last week, and the party will undoubtedly be campaigning aggressively over the coming weeks to realise its ambition of returning circa ten TDs to the Dáil.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

As mentioned, Sinn Féin at 19% is just one percentage point behind Fine Gael in today's poll, and given the difficulty the party traditionally has in turning out its core vote, its primary objective must surely be to return circa 20 TDs next month, with a view to positioning itself as potential king-maker in post-election negotiations.

The Green Party, at 7% support this month, seems destined to return with seven or more TDs after the election, and the party will take comfort in the fact that its level of support in rural areas (6%) is essentially on a par with its urban (7%) support – suggesting perhaps that the likes of Saoirse McHugh in Mayo could pull off a coup come polling day.

Finally, we should not forget the Independents and smaller parties, and the fact that around one in six of the electorate currently indicate they are likely to opt for a candidate from this pool.
